PARIS OF TO-DAY.

Jessie Shepard Writes of the Revolution in Her Society.

The Return of Patti After Fifteen Years' Absence.

Empress Eugenie---Her Sorrow---Wagner Music.

Paris, January 10.

The season has opened with rumors of revolution on all sides—in politics, in art, in the church, in the theatres—new ideas and startling innovations supply fresh sensations for a public never weary of novelty and dramatic incident.

Well acquainted with the modes and manners of the Parisians under the empire, I am constrained to say, without reserve, that the Paris of to-day is in everything wholly unlike the Paris of twenty years ago. I can see a vast difference between the customs of the present and the habits of life prevalent even five years ago.

The season of 1888 and 1889 has already supplied what sensations which, as a famous writer remarked to me the other day, are sure to furnish interesting studies for the future historian. Patti has appeared at the Grand opera after an absence of fifteen years, an absence which recalled the Parisians considerable mortification considering the fact that they still cling to the illusion that all great artists are bound to make frequent visits to the French capital.

"It was with the gravest apprehensions that Mme. Patti consented to take the place of the prima donna who was announced to appear in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet." All sorts of exaggerating announcements were thrown to the public in the form of compliments to the French nation, to French art, to the good Parisians and to Gounod in order to prepare the people for the ordeal of the first night. I have seldom witnessed a more curious, more interesting manœuvre on the part of a great singer. Fifteen years of continued triumphs in Russia, England and America made the French somewhat bitter and curious towards Patti. The journals gave no explanation to this feeling, but Mme. Patti—woman and artist—knew it and felt it, and was afraid of the final result. The mere fact of the celebrated singer consenting to appear in grand opera for the bagatelle of $800 a night is sufficient to show the importance of this affair. Never was there such a farce mingled with the drama—Patti returning to the great capital, the luxurious centre of Europe, to sing for $800 a night! There was a precious scramble for tickets for the first representation of "Romeo and Juliet" that surpassed anything of the kind in years. The best seats went for $100, while boxes sold for any price. A brilliant audience assembled to applaud the diva after having been duly prepared in advance by skillfully worded announcements in all the journals to the effect that Patti would sing for a sum just sufficient to defray her actual expenses—a nice bait for an artist with the wealth and the talent of Patti to throw to the Parisian populace!

While this farce was going on across the stage of a dramatic nature were being enacted, in which the Empress Eugenie was the principal figure. Twenty years ago, while Patti was singing, at the Theatre Lyrique, Eugenie was living in the Tuileries, a beautiful woman, the most distinguished among famous women. The other day the ex empress came to Paris with her mind made up to look once more on the spot where the magnificent palace once stood, in which she held so many regal fetes and in which Louis the Great, Marie Antoinette and so many others feasted and fattened and dreamed away the days and the years, without a thought for the morrow or the impending revolutions. The ex-empress is a guest of the Duchesse de Mouchy, and the two drove to the long vacant place in the heart of Paris to gaze on the spot where not a stone, not a bit of mortar, is left of the famous and gorgeous pile once known as the Tuileries. The ex empress was overcome and fainted in the arms of the duchess. What thoughts these things awaken for the historian and the student of human nature! Patti claims after long years to renew her triumphs at the age of forty four. Eugenie returns, an old woman, to weep over the scenes of glory long past and gone!

The death of the Duchess of Sutherland in England was followed by that of the Duchesse de Galliera in Paris the other day.

Senator Stanford a gift of $20,000,000 to the state of California is now rivalled by the splendid donations of the Duchesse de Galliera who, altogether, has given away a little over a hundred million francs. The man, or of this remarkable woman in the Rue de Varenne is a veritable palace of luxury and art—the most sumptuous private residence in Paris. The duchess left twenty five millions to the city of Genoa, her birth place, besides palaces in that city one to be turned into an asylum and the other to be made into a hospital. The Paris mansion is bequeathed to the ambassador of Austria. There was some difficulty in the settlement of this superb property until to-day, when the Austrian government gave the ambassador permission to accept the donation. He however accepted the millions to Mme. de Monster, the daughter of the Grand equerry, fifteen millions to Philippe Le Bon, and twelve millions to the Empress Victoria. In her will the Duchesse de Galliera has given orders that the garden be maintained as it is at an annual expense of sixteen francs. The funeral train left Paris yesterday for Genoa, where solemn ceremonies will be held over all the remains of a woman who loved art, artists and the poor, and who never tired of unostentatious deeds of charity.

An important reception was recently given by the Baron de Billing. All the leading disciples of Boulanger were there in force. Rochefort sat beside Prince Roland Bonaparte; the brother of the King of Naples sat beside the Prince of Valoris, the friend of Don Carlos; the Count de Turenne, Count de Bethune, Essah Pasha, the Turkish ambassador, and Ramon Fernandez, the Mexican minister. The array presents a strange medley of aristocratic titles to come together on the same evening in honor of a republican leader. But, as I remarked at the head of this letter, Paris is undergoing a revolution in everything.

For some unaccountable reason the Russian colony leads in the foreign portion of fashionable Paris this year. Russian tea, literature, fashions are the rage. The advent of a couple of grand dukes, with their usual train of titled lackeys, set the ball in motion early in the season, so that now we may expect a new and curious interblending of Russian hyperactivity and French finesse until some more powerful form of sensuality takes possession of that queer conglomeration known as Parisian society. One of the most startling features about the revolution of artistic thought in Paris is the triumph of Wagner's music. Not a concert takes place that does not contain a selection from some of the great composer's works, and this appreciation is on the increase.

The success of the day in literature is a volume of epics by the Limousine poet, the Abbe Joseph Roux, the celebrated author of "Pensees." For a long time Paris has not witnessed a theatrical uproar like that experienced at the Odeon the other evening at the first representation of "Germanie Lacerteux," by De Goncourt. To day this realistic play is the talk of Paris, the dramatic sensation of the hour. It is now war to the knife between the realists, headed by De Goncourt and Zola, and the conservatives, backed by a large and powerful following, including many of the young writers of talent. De Goncourt was a long time in getting this revelation of realistic art ready for the stage. Every act was put together piece by piece, every phrase cut and polished, until nothing superfluous remained, nothing that would in the slightest degree border on the ideal or the romantic. I believe De Goncourt was some years turning this drama of Parisian realism over in his head before committing his inspirations to paper. Zola, he declared, had not gone far enough, an element more real, more dramatic, more intense, should supply a place in all modern plays. There are ten tableaux in "Germanie Lacerteux," and from beginning to end it is one continual procession of painful realities, more intense, if possible, than the realism of "L'Assommoir." The two great scenes of the piece are the hospital and the cemetery. In the latter the climax of dramatic melancholy is reached. A female figure approaches the graveyard and in the gloom stumbles over the graves. It is a picture of social horrors unrelieved by pathos or poetry, in which poverty, greed, sensuality and vice fill every role, and in which the hardest characters seem to carry the palm and win the prize. The theatre during the first two representations was a bedlam of confusion, hisses, groans, cries, applause for the actors, mingled applause and contempt for the author. The actors came out of the fray covered with glory, but at the close of the first performance some one came forward and spoke the name of the author, De Goncourt. This was the signal for a renewal of mingled applause, hisses and shaking of fists at adversaries, real or imaginary. Paris is therefore divided into two camps, the advanced realists and the idealist of a new but conservative school. After the first performance Alphonse Daudet gave a supper at his residence in the Rue de Bellechase to which forty of the leading realists and critics were invited. At this gathering of notables another extraordinary scene occurred. Emile Zola and De Goncourt had long been on unfriendly terms. A great surprise awaited the company as Zola rose with a glass of wine in his hand to drink to the success of "Germanie Lacerteux." Among the celebrities present were M. de Goncourt, Emile Zola, Aurelian Scholl, Paul Mayerton the poet and editor M. Descaves, M. Zeller of the Institute, Gaston Geff[illegible]

TOILETTES IN CHINA.

HOW THEY ARE REGARDED BY NATIVES OF THE MIDDLE KINGDOM.

Details and Curious Observations That Much About How to Live, How the Ignorant Masses and Their Rulers Are Governed.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 1. In the United States the [illegible] has a hard road to travel. He is persecuted and ostracized by the people generally. Small boys torment him, and policemen and judges arrest and fine him on the slightest provocation. The [illegible] regard him as the lowest and most degraded of human beings. The wearing of the queue by the Chinese is the best informed and most intelligent citizen of the Middle Kingdom today. He is pronounced by many as liberal and friendly to European ideas and influences. It is correct to say, indeed, that Li does not love foreigners more, but fears them more intelligently than others, and that about the secret of his attitude toward missionaries, Bible Knights, Li [illegible] to the throne on these subjects he has always based his arguments upon policy, never upon theology. He recognizes the helpless condition of his country as to the designs of foreigners, and he faces it with a clear vision that thoroughly [illegible] the Chinese people to retain their existence for any length of time in her ability to defend her interests with arms. The control of China on the part of another is the inevitable end, whether European encroachments are feeding, just as in India and Australia, and the American continent, too, for that matter. The white races seem to rule the earth, and, judging from the present outlook, it is only a question of time when that will be the case. It is not a wonder, therefore, that the better informed Mongolians who have given the matter thought, should feel hostile toward all foreigners.

Treachery in China has been little, if any, exercised with the better classes of the natives, and for the above reasons.

Hence, in what I shall say of the crude ideas and foolish beliefs of the people regarding foreigners, it must be remembered that I refer only to the common and ignorant masses. The higher classes utterly ignore the presence and do not hesitate to show their contempt for us. The interior cities and farming districts know less about us, and hence look upon us more with curiosity than with fear or hatred.

There are some queer traditions and beliefs regarding the ways of the white faces, which has led to quite serious complications and results.

One of these is the oft asserted statement that foreigners use the eyeballs of the human eye in compounding their medicines. Women have laid this over their children as a menace to enforce discipline. It is a common thing to hear parents tell their children that unless they keep quiet and do as bidden they will be given to the "foreign devils." The result is that the average foreigner is in constant fear of his life when foreigners are around. They fully expect to be pounced upon and have their eyes plucked out for medicinal use. I know of one instance where a boy had wandered from his home and lost his way. The rumor spread and soon a great mob gathered, believing that the boy had been kidnapped by a couple of missionaries, who had a chapel in the city. The chapel was attacked by a thousand men, bent on rescuing that boy, and the building was razed, not one stone being left upon another.

The infuriated people were dispersed only when the native magistrate, being appealed to by the missionaries for protection, sent a regiment of soldiers to restore order. The local authorities were compelled to rebuild the chapel, which they did. But the incident shows one source of danger to foreigners in that country. One has no means of judging when a murderous outbreak is brewing of secret [illegible] upon him. As we pass through the country we are greeted on every hand by women and children crying out "Yang Kwei tze" and "Big Face Kwei tze." These epithets, being translated, mean "foreign devil" and "red haired devil."

The people generally are [illegible] upon an equal footing [illegible] our friends visited a city some forty miles inland from the Ying-tze river. News [illegible] If the "foreign devils" were shattered [illegible] provided my friends to [illegible] their boat under escort. This was my excuse to get rid of the [illegible]

[illegible] surrounded by a howling [illegible] all clamoring for the heads [illegible] decorated their escort in the act of preparing to slay them to their fate. Each took him by an arm and told the frightened man that for every [illegible] they would pay him two taels. Then they gazed [illegible] and pointed the [illegible] of the city. As the [illegible] came on, [illegible] they broke away, leaving [illegible] almost entirely denuded of [illegible] by the crowd. They [illegible] a short distance, then fell over an embankment [illegible] where, as now here upon this [illegible] they could not tell. The people heard their splash in the water, and raised the shout that the "devils were drowned."

The [illegible] swam the stream and [illegible] under the [illegible] down the course. [illegible] in their employ, though [illegible] corrected to them. They had [illegible] encouragement, and now that the Americans were across the river in safety, the boatmen set their boat adrift in the current and noiselessly dropped below the city. Sending one of their [illegible] to take the naked and half dead foreigners they were carefully stored in their [illegible] and traveled thirty miles without food, shelter or clothing. One of them has since died from disease contracted that night. They made complaint to the United States minister at Peking and he demanded indemnity. The matter was [illegible] stood by the magistrate who refused the indemnity, the reason being required to make good their loss in the way of clothing. They got $100 each for their bitter experience.

I was told of the above instance soon after my arrival in the interior of China, and I immediately provided myself with a seven chambered [illegible] revolver, and a breech loading shotgun and a Henry rifle. I never went on a boat excursion without these guns loaded for bear, and I never went on foot or chair journeys without either the revolver or the shotgun, or both. I never expected to be forced to use these arms. The knowledge of the [illegible] that I had them rendered their use unnecessary. The cowards would never attack an armed foreigner in the open day, and when I slept at night I either kept a watch upon the deck of the yacht or dropped [illegible] my dog (an Irish setter which was my constant companion) to give notice by barking of the approach of another [illegible]. The people are not armed, fortunately, and they have a wholesome fear of foreign arms and ammunition.

One of my traveling companions on [illegible] Christian was an American who spoke the Chinese language fluently. He stood over six feet high and wore a full [illegible] reddish beard which came down upon his breast, giving him a striking appearance. This [illegible] related a strange adventure he had with an [illegible] priest who had never seen a foreigner. The American [illegible] upon a Buddhist temple in an unfrequented [illegible]

[illegible] the priest grew [illegible] a passage, leading back, caused a smile to overspread the American's face. This [illegible] the priest's resentment, and he [illegible] full length upon the ground, [illegible] my friend by the legs, he [illegible] roughly, I am told, [illegible] of what [illegible] the unarmed American.

[illegible] ye to go with [illegible] ready to go home. I have waited long for your coming, oh, Stang Li!"

At this declaration, my friend [illegible] gave [illegible] to upset [illegible]. The man looked at each other in [illegible] amazement. They said it was the "black art." Then took hold of my beard with one hand and my beard with the other and asked if I should lift my head off for their amusement. They all begged me not to do so. But they were for a moment doubtful [illegible] false teeth, and hence there could be no greater mystery to them than for me to lift [illegible] and insert them again.

MONUMENT MATTERS.

The Divide Short on Feed for the Stock.

Horses Declared to Have Glanders by the State Veterinary.

Mr. O. P. Jackson Reported Quite Seriously Ill.

MONUMENT, January 17.

Monument was treated to a genuine old-fashioned snow storm on Monday last. Snow fell to the depth of about three inches on the level and drifted considerably over the Divide. This is the heaviest snow storm of the season, our winter so far having been remarkably pleasant. Owing to the scarcity of feed our ranchmen pray for an open winter, as the stock throughout this part of the country is not in good condition to weather through many severe storms, and our ranchmen prefer to keep what little feed they have for the spring storms, which they anticipate will be unusually severe on account of the absence of snow this winter.

The state veterinary surgeon, Dr. Lamb, of Denver, was at this place on Tuesday last for the purpose of thoroughly investigating the disease that has prevailed among the horses in and about Monument for some time past. He pronounces the disease as being glanders, and although Mr. S. F. Lambert has a horse seriously affected the animal was not ordered to be killed owing to the fact that the money appropriated by the state is exhausted and there is in consequence thereof no funds to pay for the animals ordered to be killed. In several other towns the people are afflicted by the disease, but so far there are no cases among the people of Monument.

Mr. T. J. Conway, of Palmer Lake, will act as clerk for Hon. C. D. Ford during the time that the legislature is in session at Denver.

P. M. Kean visited Colorado Springs on Monday last.

Rev. C. E. De Long is holding a series of gospel meetings at the Presbyterian church. The week of prayer which has just ended was well attended. Several new members were added to the church on Sunday evening.

Rev. P. Rivalker, a Catholic missionary from Denver, held the services of the Catholic church at this place on Thursday morning.

Hon. C. D. Ford, of Denver, spent Sunday last with his family at this place.

Mayor A. F. Woodward is serving in the capacity of a juryman at Denver.

Ralph Saxton, of Rockwood ranch, transacted business at Pueblo on Tuesday last.

The many friends of Mr. O. P. Jackson learn with regret that he is seriously ill at his ranch south of Monument. Mr. Jackson contracted a severe cold last November that eventually settled upon his lungs. Mr. J. is at present unable to leave his bed, but we look forward to a time in the near future when he will be entirely restored to health.

Jacob Shideler is seriously ill with typhoid fever. This is the fifth member of the Shideler family that has been prostrated with the disease within three months.

Wm. Younger, of Palmer Lake, swapped weather stories with the prophets of Monument on Wednesday night.

Frank and Wm. Galley, two prominent ranchmen from Gwillimville, were on our streets Wednesday last.

Mr. Will Loney, of Loney's ranch, Gwillimville, was a visitor at Monument on Wednesday.

Mr. J. E. Kirk, of Table Rock, visited friends at Monument during the past week. Mr. Kirk runs an experimental farm on the Divide. He introduced the White Elephant potato and realized a handsome sum thereby. He expects to introduce a new potato called the "Rural Home No. 2." Also a new kind of oats in the near future.

Mr. R. C. Herick, of the Arch Rock ranch, made a trip to the Springs on Wednesday.

Among those who attended the funeral of Mrs. T. M. Bonnet at Colorado Springs on Sunday last, were E. F. Talbert, C. Jamyson, John Pollock, J. E. Smith, E. A. Benedict, M. Kennedy, George Zimmerman, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hobbs, Mrs. Emma Yale, Miss Carrie Roth and Mrs. J. M. Duffy.

Mr. George M. Ewing of the literary department of the Rock Island returned to the city yesterday. He reports the pamphlet which the company is getting out descriptive of the health and pleasure resorts of the state, as progressing nicely. The book is to contain 32 pages and over 200,000 copies are to be distributed. Colorado Springs, Manitou, Cascade and Green Mountain Falls are all to be suitably mentioned in it.

Mrs. J. A. Aiken left for Vermont last night for a visit of several weeks with friends and relatives.

Next month we shall begin the publication of a valuable series of newspaper letters on Russian topics by Stepniak, the author of "The Russian Peasantry," "The Russian Storm Cloud," "Russia Under the Czars" and "Underground Russia." These letters were secured by Mr. Theodore Stanton, of whom we have purchased the right to publish them. "I have not treated these subjects in my previous works," Stepniak writes to Stanton, "and when the series shall have appeared in your syndicate, I propose publishing the articles in book form, both in England and the United States." The articles by George Kennan have attracted universal attention. The series that we shall publish will not be less remarkable, and will in some respects give a nearer view of social and political life in Russia. There will be also a more personal interest in the letters because the writer has been for distinguished a participant in much that he writes about. The subjects of these letters are as follows:

I.—THE WOMAN QUESTION.

Tourgenieff once said that Russian women are superior to Russian men. This letter will show how and why, in this most backward of all European countries, the intellectual and social emancipation of women is more advanced than in any other civilized nation.

II.—DEMOCRACY IN RUSSIA.

This letter will show that—notwithstanding the absolutism of the czar, there exists a democratic under-current that will become all-powerful one day.

III.—RELIGIOUS TEMPER AND RELIGION.

"This letter," writes Stepniak, "will deal with educated Russia which has no religion, but a very characteristic proclivity to exalt everything to the height of religion."

IV.—A RUSSIAN ARNOLD OF THE CZAR.

LIGHT OF HUMANITY.

"This will be a sketch of the life and character of one of the most remarkable of our men, recently deceased in London, a naturalized American, who has done good work in the United States as the founder of several experimental communistic associations."—Stepniak to Mr. Stanton.

V.—RUSSIAN PENNY LITERATURE.

"I shall treat here that strictly popular literature which once existed all over Europe but has now degenerated."

VI.—RUSSIAN MODERN POETS, NOVELISTS AND ESSAYISTS.

"Many of their names have never been mentioned outside of Russia, so far as I know."

VII.—PAINTERS OF RURAL LIFE.

"A peculiar set of writers of first rate ability and talent to whom there is nothing analogous in western literature."

VIII.—ALEXANDER III., THE TRIBUNE OF THE PEOPLE.

"I show here that the present czar is not only not 'the Tribune of the People,' but that he could not be such if he tried."

IX.—PUBLIC EDUCATION IN RUSSIA.

This letter is a proof of the new law concerning college and university education in the empire.

X.—RUSSIAN ARISTOCRACY AS A PROTECTION TO THE THRONE.

The author will here point out the strength and weakness of the ruling classes of the empire.

XI.—OFFICIAL SUBSCRIPTION IN RUSSIA.

This letter will show the fundamental causes, moral and historic, of the rottenness of the Russian bureaucracy.

XII.—TOLSTOI AS PREACHER OF A NEW FAIR RELIGION.

"Although I have never met the celebrated novelist, I know well one of his most intimate friends, who has told me many new and curious things about the eccentric count."

XIII.—GEORGE KENNAN'S "CENTURY" ARTICLE.

"I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Kennan in London after his return from Siberia, and on becoming acquainted with his mind and heart, I understood how and why he had collected and in so short a time, such a vast amount of valuable information. As to his articles in the Century Magazine, they are what the Germans call 'epoch making.'"

The fight for a prohibitory amendment in Pennsylvania will be watched with much interest throughout the country. There seems to be but little reasonable doubt that the legislature now in session, or in that state will pass the resolution now before it calling for a special election to submit the question of a constitutional amendment to the people. Hosts for the amendment have been marshaled and are now in the field. The politicians are also in the field to take advantage of the movement as they may. Largely from the republican ranks. The first steps towards organizing the supporters of the amendment were taken at a mass meeting held early in January in the city of Indiana. Since then several large and enthusiastic meetings have been held in other parts of the state and there seems to be a general disposition to make an organized, systematic and determined fight without regard to politics one way or the other hand the opposition of the various liquor organizations and their friends will be equally determined and perhaps better organized. BOARD OF TRADE.

The Board of Trade Fails to Elect New Officers at the Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the board of trade was held in the city hall last night. President Ehrich called the meeting to order, and after the minutes of the previous meeting had been read, announced that the election of officers would have to be postponed to the by laws to the effect that there should be twenty five members present at the annual election, and that there were not that many present.

Mr D B Fairley chairman of the Rock Island right of way committee, made a report of progress as follows: Amount received on subscription $12,417 75 amount paid out $11,510 20 balance on hand $1,921 55 There are liabilities ranging between $2000 and $2500, and $1725 still due in unpaid subscriptions About $1000 of that amount can be collected.

Mr George R Buckman, chairman of the printing committee, submitted his report for the year. It showed that the committee had been very active in distributing matter that would benefit the city, considering the limited means at their disposal. The railroads, which have the best means of circulating matter of the kind, had been appealed to and had rendered good service.

Mr Ehrich, from the committee appointed to present the resolutions adopted at the last meeting of the board regarding an additional water supply to the city council, reported that they had done so, and that active steps were being taken in that direction. The committee was discharged.

Mr. G. M. Ewing, of the Rock Island advertising department, appeared before the board to explain the pamphlet that the road is getting out descriptive of the summer resorts of Colorado. He stated that about one-fifth of the book was to be devoted to Colorado Springs, and that it would cost something like 36000 to print it. He thought that $500 was not an unfair proportion of the expense for the city to bear.

Mr. F. E. Dow stated that he had examined into the matter and he believed it would be a good medium for advertising the city.

Mr. Reuben Bailey favored that method of advertising. He had had a great deal experience in that kind of advertising and believed that it paid.

Mr. L. R. Gowdy, of the Republic, said he believed in the principle of protection. If the city had $500 to spend in such purposes it should be spent in this city.

Mr. Kinsley Ferris thoroughly agreed with Mr. Dow and Mr. Bailey, and said that he would pledge one tenth of the amount.

A motion that the chair appoint a committee of three to take charge of the matter and raise the money, then prevailed without a dissenting voice. The chair appointed as such committee Mr. R. Buckman, Mr. M. L. DeCourcey and Mr. J. P. Humphrey.

Several members went out and the said gentlemen's attention being called to the fact that there was not a quorum present the meeting adjourned.

COLLEGE NOTES.

One more new student has entered the college this week.

That order may be maintained in the school during study hours it has been found necessary to lay down regulations for the enforcement of good conduct. We don't think that the students are to blame.

A very enjoyable Japanese tea was given by the young ladies on Thursday afternoon and evening. The girls are to be congratulated. The affair netted $25.

Tickets for the course in literature are now on rapid sale and it would be wise for those who wish to attend to secure them as soon as possible. The first lecture will be given next Friday afternoon by Rev. J. B. Gregg. The subject of it will be "Dante."

Last Wednesday came the first rhetorical exercise of this term. President Slocum announced that towards the end of the term a prize rhetorical exhibition would be given. The six best readers from the young men and the six best readers among the young women will be selected for this contest.

"Alone in London" was presented for the first time in this city at the opera house last night to a crowded house. Long before the curtain went up "standing room only" was the only answer to the inquirer after seats at the box office. Of its kind "Alone in London" is a good play and any doubts as to the popularity of plays of its class have been promptly set at rest by a look at the crowded house last night. Not only was the audience a large one but it was an unusually enthusiastic one. Every dark deed of the heavy villain every joke of the funny man was roundly applauded. The cast with few exceptions is a good one. Miss Ada Rehan as Nan is a difficult part on the whole well played, as is also Mr. Craig's part and Redcliff As Mrs Maloney, Marian Strickland makes a most excellent typical Irish woman. Both her brogue and her brogue are good and never overdone as is so often the case. Mr Alfred Fisher plays a very difficult part but his ability cannot be questioned by the Charlie Johnson of last night.

"Alone in London" company left over D A R G train at 6 o'clock this morning for Denver.

Stake money posted to day at 3 o'clock. I am a dead sure winner."

The Zanzibar Insurrection.

ZANZIBAR, January 18. During the attack on the German missionary station at Tuga the insurgents massacred four German missionaries, one of whom was a woman. Three missionaries, one a woman, fell into the hands of the Arabs and are held for ransom. The admiral commanding the squadron landed a force at Dares Salem for the purpose of garrisoning the place.

NEW YORK FASHIONS.

WHAT OLIVE HARPER HAS TO SAY UPON THIS SUBJECT.

Notes of Visit—Designs Ten Gowns and Negligees and Other Matters Dear to the Heart of the Average Sister.

[Special Correspondence.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—The spring shopping season is now about commencing, and it is amusing to watch the air of pent up excitement that possesses the little mothers and wives who are getting ready for bargain hunting, for it is just between seasons that the best bargains are to be obtained. The old season's goods are sold for what they will bring, regardless of cost, for the sake of having ready cash to replenish and also to make room for new stock. All the best houses do this, and all standard goods change little with three or four seasons, so that it is worth hunting for such valuable game. And besides, there are remnants big enough for combinations, and children's clothes for almost nothing compared to the original cost. These little bargain hunters know this district well.

It is estimated that one million women make the tour of this retail dry goods route daily, and I believe it, only I think from the constant crowd, twenty and thirty deep, from morning till night, that the number is underestimated. Every one of these women will spend all the money she has, and if her husband's credit is good she will spend more yet and have the bill sent in, so that a safe average is that every one will spend a dollar a day. That makes a comfortable sum a month, don't it? It keeps the men's noses to the grindstone, and that is good for them, for if they were not doing something useful they might get into mischief.

The newest silks of the season are a soft armure, and the plain gros grains, with a satiny ribbed finish; peau de soie, which is soft and elastic; faille Francaise and many styles and colors of brocades, nearly all approaching the ancient silks. These are also moires and satines. Silks vary from 60 cents to $50 per yard. Drap d'Alves and drapd'ete are regaining popularity, and chevrons, armures and basket weaves are still among the newest importations, as well as henry nun's serge, all in black and colors. Woolen goods cost all the way from 12 cents to $2.50 per yard. The silk warp Henriettas are $1 to $2 per yard, and good cashmeres and wool Henriettas can be bought from 45 cents to 60 cents per yard, 44 inches wide.

Buttons have not been seen for several months on the handsomest felt hats, hooks and eyes or some other occult means holding them together, but now there are new styles in buttons, so very handsome and artistic that the heart of woman has rebelled. Some of them cost $7 apiece, and are set with garnets. One lovely set of buttons for they come in sets large and small has a mother of pearl foundation, bordered with a ring of chased gold, with tiny gold and steel fans set in the center. I think I may safely state that buttons are "in" again.

The prettiest dress goods of the season is the silk and wool alpaca. It is to be had in black, white and all the solid colors now in vogue, and white, pale pink, blue or other tint, with tiny figures and bouquet stamped upon it in natural colors with exquisite coloring and detail. It falls into most graceful folds and drapes in a manner to delight the eye of an artist. It is silky and lustrous, durable, and bids fair to take the place of the much used nun's veiling, which has the defect of catching dust. Black Dust finds no footing upon it. There are some beautiful novelties in braids for trimming and house decoration are of such fine texture and finish that they admit of the use of velvet as trimmings, and thus this goods also falls directly into line of favor. It is particularly pretty for little girls' dresses.

Slippers are de rigueur for evening and for the house now on the side. Very few of them have buckles or rosettes, for out shoes are much higher in front, while with evening dress the tops, instead of being cut with scalloped tops, instead of being have the patent English lace, and the low common sense heels, have given place to dressier and persons who desire to be considered fashionable wearing the high heeled shoes are much more comfortable and neater in appearance than the low shoes, and a smaller size can be worn, which is a great object to all women. The Arrow tie has never entirely abolished, but a few words now are seen above to remind what the woman suffrage who wears them of any of my sufferers. Yes, she should have a tiny wee little voice which makes a little shrill sound. That tells her what to do. Take out a hat pin or safety pin and mount it and fix it over the offender for three or four nights, and it will decamp to death and simply fall off. It is the death that kills all [illegible] this trade. Hundred times, and it never fails.

Flower garniture for dress for evening is growing in proportion. Some of the gowns have as many as twenty large roses, with buds and foliage scattered about over the skirts. A few carnations are also seen, but the chrysanthemums still remain the favorite, probably because they are so costly.

People in high society in New York are very fond of flowers, so I am informed, that a rare $1,500 plant was stolen from the last chrysanthemum show, which resulted in the fine plants being rather chained this year or exhibited under a glass case. These plants are kept in tubs or large pots, and some one now and then walks away with them.

The prettiest fancy of the season is the Little Lord Fauntleroy costume which I present in this letter. It is made of black velvet or velveteen, and is worn with a sash of cardinal satin. The jacket is a simple, plain roundabout, with knee breeches and black stockings. White linen collars can be worn with it, and high sleeves, though the Vandyke collar and cuff and low buckle shoes are more suitable for full dress. Mothers cannot fail to succeed in making so simple a suit. A Scotch cap of velvet or a tyrol hat can be worn. The costume is suitable for boys up to about 10 years.

SOME STUNNERS.

The quaint and dainty little gown for a young girl needs no description. I might add, however, that this can be worn over a guimpe if desired. It is a fashion that is gaining steadily in favor for young girls.

New designs in tea gowns are being evolved with such praiseworthy rapidity that it really makes one's head swim to keep up with them. I present two of the prettiest that I have seen. One is made of pekin bronze plush, with facings and front of pale blue Ottoman silk, with a curtain drapery of white Hamburg netting. This costume can also be worn to quite receptions here dinners. This model can be made in many materials. It is true that the long angel sleeves would be apt to make a havoc among the tea things. The model of this gown was made by Mrs. Secretary Whitney.

The pearl garland is of the old, old fashioned daisies is nobody in particular, and the only reason for her presence is because the dress wouldn't be pretty without her. I'll tell it out. This is one of those costumes which can be made up in any [illegible] materials and combinations, the real idea being the form of the gown, which is all the rage among young people.

Flowers are too sweet for earth. Perhaps that is why they tower heavenward so persistently. The three cornered hat is trimmed with moire and two stiff feathers. The gown, which reaches far into the unknowable, is of velvet, trimmed with gold braided ribbon and a dead duck's wing. The other hat represents the fashionable manner of wearing a veil. Some of the veils are bordered with [illegible] dots, some are of [illegible] ity. If any girl's grandmother has an old veil now is the time to appropriate it, for just now it is in fashion.

I don't think a number of ever leaving presented the patient readers of these letters with any dressing sacques of negligees, and I hasten to fulfill my duty in this respect. The three elegant and dainty garments here presented can be worn as dressing sacques, negligees or they can be worn with a handsome trained skirt for tea rooms, and they are fully ornamental enough to answer such a purpose. They can be of surah, cashmere, flannel, India or China silk, and be plain or decorated with ribbon and as much lace as is desired.

THE HARRISON FAMILY.

WASHINGTON IN THE DAYS OF WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON

How Fiercely the Political Heat Glowed At the Start—An Interesting Records from Van Buren—Washington's Bookseller.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—Lowdermilk, the bookseller, has had in one of the corridors of the capitol a number of extraordinary calls for Harrison literature since the November election. There is not much literature concerning General Benjamin Harrison except that which is autobiographical, but in a fragmentary form there are many things of interest concerning the career of Gen. William Henry Harrison. These three letters are now seeking with much vim somewhat, everything pertaining to Harrison and first old books, pamphlets, letters and [illegible] brings fancy prices. A good deal of these [illegible] for Harrisoniana come from the Harrisons, not the Harrisons who are to occupy the White House, but the Harrisons who by hundreds and thousands are scattered all over the country, particularly in the western states. Every old publication among [illegible] of the Harrison family finds a ready purchaser, for it seems all the Harrisons are trying to establish relationship, no matter how distant with the old chief of their clan. Their purpose in this, it need not be said, is by no means a selfish one, for it is one of the most common and endearing traits of human nature, this desire to know how close relationship one may bear to fame or men. A good authority says the Harrisons to whom Gen. Harrison is remotely related form one of the largest numerous of all the large families in this country whose lineage can be traced to a common ancestry.

Mr. Lowdermilk showed me a couple of volumes entitled "Legacy of Historical Gleanings," largely composed of letters written by or to Gen. Sol. Van Rensselaer, of Albany, N. Y., from 1812 to 1852. Of these books many copies have lately been sold, because they contain numerous letters from and to Gen. William Henry Harrison. "I have sold two dozen sets of the legacies," said the dealer, "and could sell a hundred more if I had them. In one of the volumes is an admirable portrait of Gen. Harrison, and this is highly valued."

In looking over these volumes I was struck with the incidental pictures of the times of William Henry Harrison which they present. Most conspicuous of all is the office seeking spirit, and the hitherto and cruelty of politics even in those days. As one catches the spirit of the times from these old letters, he is led to the reflection that if Harrison, the grandfather, were to be more pestered and worried by the office hunters than was his illustrious ancestor, he is indeed to be pitied.

GEN. W. H. HARRISON.

In this quaint book is told a tale of much interest [illegible] which throws as strong a light upon the [illegible] as a presidential candidate as [illegible] of the character of the first President Harrison that I know the story worth telling here. Now that the country is teeming with ambition for election for Harrison the second, it is interesting to note how Harrison, the grandfather, was pursued by [illegible] letters, and I am right, good honest man that he was, for it is almost impossible to overlook the [illegible] of the politicians and aspirants toward one of his dearest friends who was in favor with the cabinet which then controlled [illegible] around him.

The story of one of old Gen. Solomon Van Rensselaer, who had fought with Harrison under Gen. Wayne, and who shed his blood on Queenstown Heights. President Monroe made him postmaster at Albany, but Van Buren removed him. When Gen. Harrison became president the old general concluded his lucky day had come at last. His expectations were not, in fact not to date than the circumstance justified. Gen. Harrison had been his military companion and warm friend. Van Rensselaer's son had accompanied Gen. Harrison on his diplomatic mission to Bogota, South America. Gen. Van Rensselaer was the "original Harrison man" in the Harrisburg convention, which nominated the Hero of Tippecanoe for president, and according to Gen. Van Rensselaer, that nomination would never have been made but for his efforts. During the campaign Van Rensselaer visited Gen. Harrison at North Bend, and a letter from the Whig candidate was read at a public dinner given Gen. Van Rensselaer at Cincinnati. In this letter Gen. Harrison told Gen. Van Rensselaer had been his life long friend, and dropped into poetry over the relationship that had existed between them:

"Who can tell a friend that was not Pylades,
Or Pirithous a friend that was not found?"

And Gen. Harrison continued in the lofty style which he so loved on well, not only praising his friend, but giving expression to some ideas on the Jacksonian policy of "to the victors belong the spoils" and on the abstract and wrongs of "a clean sweep," which may or may not be of particular interest at this time. Thus wrote Gen. Harrison:

I will not enter, gentlemen, to give you even a mere sketch of the services of Gen. Van Rensselaer. I will not [illegible] the deep debt of gratitude which is due to [illegible] from western men, of his gallant services in the battle of the Thames, at the [illegible] which I saw [illegible] His manly bearing upon the world of [illegible] his steadiness and firmness upon the heights of Queenstown.
